D Kitchel Mr. President: I am instructed by the Trustees of Middlebury College to express to you the sincere gratification which your acceptance of the Presidency has afforded them, and to greet you with a cordial welcome to the Institution. With the character and history of the College, you are already familiar. You have studied in its halls, you have taught in its class-rooms, you have received its honors; and though its present officers and fellows may be strangers to you, yet you are not unknown to them. Middlebury College, in whatever forms incorporated, never forgets her sons - she remembers with conscious pride, she follows with lively interest, those especially, who reflect honor upon her name. We welcome you then, Sir, not as a stranger coming among strangers, but as a son and brother returning to the old homestead after many years of honorable service in the cause of humanity, of literature, and of religion. Full of the ardent hopes and bright anticipations of youth, you took...
