CHAPTER III THE TRAIL OF THE UNKNOWN Odonovans shouts attracted the cabman beyond the iron railings, and very quickly a couple of policemen appeared upon the scene. For a few minutes there was a scene of wild excitement within the quiet little garden; then, after a cursory examination, a stretcher was brought from the Morgue over the way, the body of the unknown girl placed upon it and conveyed away to the House of the Dead, while Teddy was arrested and escorted to the police office attached to the mortuary, where, after some little delay, he was searched and closely questioned. The blood upon his hands was regarded with considerable suspicion by the police commissary, or the quart dceil as he is known to the students, but owing to the fortunate circumstances of a workman having seen him enter the garden, and a cabman...
