Nay--speak not thus, my father dear; But one short year away --and then, Make promise--thou wilt wander here, And visit us again. Daily I ll watch thy favourite vine Put forth its verdant shade of leaves, And train its tendrils to entwine And trellis all the eaves. Fondly I ll note when budding flowers O erhang thy favourite window-seat;--And eager count the passing hours Until, at length, we meet Oh, quickly speed thee back again! And now, she cried, a fond farewell! Soon will a year elapse: --till then Remember Isabelle I Even now, methinks, her parting words As if prolonged by magic spell, Still vibrate on my spirit s chords-- Remember Isabelle! The tedious years at length went past: Again I reached a foreign shore: With joyful steps I trade at last Provence s soil once more. I stood upon a vine-clad spot O erhanging yon romantic dell, Where stands the lone sequestered cot That sheltered Isabelle. The balmy breath of summer eve (Exhaled from many a fragrant flower) Seemed to my fancy to receive Fresh.sweetness in that hour. With eager steps, I culled a flower, And quickly cleared the briery brake, And here, said I, we ll form a bower Beside that fairy lake. What though the gathering clouds at last Were shrouding all the sunset sky, And evening s hues were yielding fast To the fair moon on high? I knew the scenes of former days, Familiar every nook to me;...
