The clock corrections arc deduced from the places of Encke s Jahrbuch, which for  $y$  Ursa?, and some other stars, agree better with our observations than those of the Nautical Almanac. It will be observed that both clocks were accelerated at the 15t ; this was chiefly caused by a fall of the barometer of three-fourths of an inch (Memoirs Ast. Soc., vol. v. p. 125). The mercurial pendulum of my clock is accelerated  $0 . 37$  by a fall of one inch; the coefficient for the gridiron pendulum which belongs to the Dublin clock is probably greater, but as the effect is only differential, it seemed unnecessary to allow for it. The differences of longitude given by the signals are as follows: Were we to suppose the results of each night of equal weight, and take the arithmetical mean, we should find,  $R = lm. 14s. 44 E = . 14 44 F = . 14 38$  but this condition cannot be assumed; for a greater number of signals are observed on some nights, and the clock correction is concluded with unequal probability. The probable error of the difference of observed times is, denoting by  $e$  that of the transit of a single star supposed the same at each observatory (as it is at Armagh and Dublin in fact), and by  $s$  the...
